To Whom It May Concern:

I live a block away from the Colburn house and pass it almost daily while walking in the neighborhood with my dogs. My husband and I watched as the construction of the pergola and the other back yard improvements came along. We often comment about how beautiful it is and such a pleasure to walk by a corner lot that is so well taken care of. It is in no way an eyesore. In fact, I would love to have it in my own yard.

I think the pergola adds to the beauty of the neighborhood and is so much more appealing to pass by than the other homes on Thatcher that have let their wooden fences, swingsets and decks deteriorate.

Sincerely,

Pam Molnar

To Whom it May Concern,

I am a twenty-one year resident of Saddle Creek subdivision and I believe that pergolas add value to our houses and make the neighborhood look more upscale. When I see these built in people's yards, I think they look like they put a lot of money into their yard and it looks great.

They are completely open and do not appear heavy or bulky in any sense. They are definitely not an eyesore or a burden to anyone. I love when people have these. All the surrounding neighborhoods that are more upscale have these awesome structures and kitchens built in their backyard, and it adds a great deal to the property value. These are expensive structures that people have designers create and build. You could expect more money when selling your house if you had one of these in your backyard.

To whom it may concern,
We are neighbors of the Colburn's at 2304 Spikehorn. We understand that they are having a review of their newly constructed pergola. Our opinion is it is an attractive, well-constructed addition that will add value and beauty to their property.
